Commemorates Signing Of the Magna Charta

Mrs. M. Monteiro Berry entertained in honor of the anniversary of the signing of the magna charta on Thursday evening at the clubhouse, 1722 H street, and was hostess to a large number of prominent Washingtonians, besides the members of the Mal. William Overton Callis Chapter, D. A. R.

A wonderful musical interpretation of an original poem was given by Dr. Alexander Henneman, following which Judge C. C. Calhoun spoke on the magna charta and the twenty-five barons who stood for its enforcement, and stated that nine of these barons were the direct ancestors of the hostess, Mrs. Berry.

Representative William D. Upshaw made an address, and Dr. John T. Huddle read his own poem, entitled "America." Mr. Claude Bennett made the presentations, and Mr. Edwin Callow won much applause with two solos.

MRS. MELVIN HOWELL TENNIS.

Tales of Well Known Folk In Social and Official Life

Custis was Eleanor Calvert, daughter of Lord Baltimore, who on becoming a widow married Dr. David U. Stuart, one of the first commissioners of the District of Columbia. On his father's death by the hands of a primogeniture, he inherited all the Parke and Custis household equipment and plate, together with much of which came from the Calvert side. All these and splendid gifts from Fitzhugh and Fairfaxes were in Arlington mansion when it was confiscated and it will be a mighty task for Mrs. Keyes and her aides to trace all these lovely things through more than half a century of wandering.

Another fine old mansion of historical interest became the property of the United States recently when the Naval Academy at Annapolis purchased Gambrill Manor, the seat of the Hammond family since the late seventeenth century. The corner stone on the manor bears the date of 1700, but it is the second house which the Hammonds built on their ancestral tract, which now lies just outside the capital of Maryland. The naval authorities purchased the estate for farm land for the Academy, but the manor and the cemetery where six generations of Hammonds sleep will remain untroubled. Both are under the care of the daughters of the American Revolution, who hold many meetings annually in the house and whose pious task it is to keep the graveyards trim and the manor in good repair. The first master of Gambrill Manor was Richard Hammond, who took possession of his grant in 1687. Hammond died in 1711 to the present may be found in this holy rood and many of the inscriptions are quaint and original. The last owner was conducting a model dairy, and the government has taken over all this for the benefit of the future heroes of the Navy.

A slip of a girl not yet fourteen, Miss Ethel McClary of the New York Women's Swimming Association, holds the world record in thrashing 300 yards in a trifle less than four minutes, and that on the very first day of swimming entries for champions to compete at various municipal beaches in this country and Europe. Miss McClary has been exhibiting her method in pools of the Y. W. C. A. and of athletic clubs and she has given a wide vogue to what is termed the "crawl" stroke—the eight-beat movement which athletic teachers have been trying in vain to popularize for seasons past. She has proven conclusively that this way is practical for speed and endurance as well as for sprinting contests. Those who keep account of progress in amateur sports say that swimming has now passed tennis in the patronage of Americans and that the most pronounced gains have been made in records, especially in those cities which, like Washington, make a specialty of the bathing beach. Groups of champions are being forced to challenge each other all along the Atlantic coast and thence across the continent to the Pacific. Miss McClary's performance takes the championship in the feminine group from San Francisco, where she held it in different winners for several years past. It also takes it from the famous swimmer of London, Miss Courtney, who made such a record at the Olympic games.

The Nassau-Bahamas Club, which has a fair membership in Washington, has been much affected by the destruction of the fine Colonial Hotel by fire within a fortnight, and its new home will probably be moved to the other side of the city of Nassau and adjacent to Fort Monague, Col. Henry T. Hunt of this city is among the managers summoned to a conference with his colleagues in New York city. Of the Nassau-Bahamas Club, Rodman Wanamaker and James Potter of Philadelphia, George B. Hulme, O. H. Granger, St. George Waller of New York; Baylor Hickman of Louisville, and A. E. Matthews of Toronto. This clubhouse at Nassau, in the Bahamas, will be among the roomiest and most luxurious in that region of the world and will cost something like $2,000,000. Besides every facility for sport, golf, tennis, racing and swimming, there will be ample accommodations for housing the members and their families for a fortnight during each season. Nassau has other hotels near by, but the Colonial was one of the most comfortable and was conducted on the old-fashioned lines which make so many of the hostilities of European resorts so popular. Several generations of Canadians have passed the cold season at the Colonial and their grief at its destruction is like that for a home.

The Nassau-Bahamas Club is more than a clubhouse, it is a social center, so called, although the funding of the clubhouse is entirely an American activity.

Mme. Maria de Coronada, who is one of the most distinguished of the foreign residents of Washington, is busily engaged on her official report to the Colombian government on the recent Pan-American conference. Mrs. de Coronada is a woman of many talents, at which she represented the department of labor in Bogota. The daughter and the granddaughter of two eminent citizens of Colombia, Mme. de Coronada devotes her entire time to organizing charitable and patriotic associations in Latin America after the most practical methods established here. Her grandfather, the late Gen. Louis Peron de la Croix, served on the staff of the revered liberator of the Spanish colonies in the southern hemisphere, Gen. Simon Bolivar, and was a close friend of the latter. The "Diario de Bucaramanga," the George Washington of South America, is the classic of the private life and public achievements of the South American hero. Gen. de la Croix left many personal reminiscences of the war of independence in which he served as a brigadier general under Bolivar in Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela. Gen. de Coronada, a madman's father-in-law, belongs to one of the most ancient and honorable of the Spanish families who occupy the Conquistador of the early sixteenth century, and there is scarcely a region where Spanish domination was established that the name Coronada is not honored in some way, most popularly in various resorts and hotels of the old days. Mme. de Coronada has lived in Washington for the past ten years.

Word comes from wondering Americans that for the first time since the devastating war old Karlsbad has returned to its former glory and it is crowded to the last inch with Americans (North and South), English and French, and the hotels and pensions filled to overflowing, the farmhouses in the suburbs have been dragged into service, to the great profit of their owners. Some glory pertains to Karlsbad this summer never known before—a fine race course, for instance, where the invalid seeking quiet and seclusion for shattered nerves may behold the reckless riding of every sort of gypsy and dweller in the nearby mountains. Under the old regime of the monks the Bohemian resort was conducted on lines as severe as those which prevail in the cloister, if the visitor came to drink the waters and to take the cure. There are still the old hotels and kursaals for those intent only on pleasure and who visit the spa but seldom. Karlsbad, usual, attracts royalty in large numbers, though this season it is the variety before which is written "ex." The former king of Saxony and his children spent several weeks in Karlsbad in early May, and there are several members of the Bavarian ruling dynasty in former days. Former King Manuel of Portugal and his wife have been among recent visitors.

The New Shoe

With 25 Years History

Imagine a shoe with moccasin comfort and metropolitan smartness. Imagine a shoe with all the beauty which fashion demands and every feature which the most exacting medical and surgical authority can suggest. Imagine a shoe that you will be proud to wear; a shoe that makes your feet and ankles slender and shapely. Imagine a shoe that can be worn all day long, which leaves your feet rested and ready for dainty and elegant Sorosis evening slippers. There you have

THE A. E. LITTLE SHOE

Twenty-five years ago a shoe was introduced that met with favor in this country and in Europe. It was the first woman's shoe to be branded with a trademark as proof of the maker's confidence in his name. Sorosis on a shoe was for the protection of the public, and the use of any name resembling it was a violation of the law.

Because the A. E. Little Company—makers of Sorosis Shoes—were the only shoe manufacturers who maintained an experimental laboratory and made their own lasts, America's most eminent surgeons requested this company to collaborate with them in designing a shoe for suffering feet. Their united efforts resulted in the development of the Sorosis Orthopedic. In a period of less than two years twenty-two thousand prescriptions for this shoe were written by New York physicians and filled at the New York store alone.

The orthopedic Sorosis is not beautiful, as are the other Sorosis shoes and slippers. But out of the A. E. Little Company's 25 years of shoe study, experiment and manufacture has now grown a new kind of shoe, for work and play—the A. E. Little Shoe. It not only satisfies the prescription of the most conscientious surgeon—but it also is beautiful.

The price is moderate, $12.50 pair.

NOTE ONE: The A. E. LITTLE laced boot is recommended for morning or all-day wear. This not only gives proper support to the foot in work or play, but also sustains the ankle and keeps it from swelling. For afternoons, the oxfords may well be chosen.

NOTE TWO: If your family physician has not heard or read about the A. E. LITTLE SHOE in the advertising pages of the Journal of the American Medical Association, please refer him to us for full information.
